Jew Constituent,
RE: HORMONE-INJECTED BEEF

Thank you for your correspondence in respect of food standards in future UK trade agreements.

Following the decision to leave the European Union, it is right that the UK takes advantage of the opportunities which will come from it. This includes an independent international trade policy and the freedom to negotiate our own trade deals with new partners and old allies across the globe.

But that does not mean that new trade deals should come at any cost. Any future deal must work for UK farmers, businesses, and consumers, and uphold food safety, animal welfare standards, and environmental protection. That is why I welcome the Government's commitment to maintain our current high food standards and ensure that imports meet all the relevant UK product rules and regulations.

In the preliminary talks between the UK and Australian Governments, there has been no desire expressed by Australian leaders or businesses to make the import of hormone-treated beef a red line in the negotiations. When negotiations with Australia and other countries do formally begin, I will fully support the continuation of the UK's robust food standards.

I agree with you that trade policy should be developed in a way which is transparent and inclusive. Parliament alongside devolved and local government, businesses, trade unions, and civil society will have a say in how the UK trades with the rest of the world after Brexit. This includes parliamentary scrutiny of new trade deals, as is already the case with all treaties negotiated by the Government.

Once again, thank you for having taken the time to contact me, and if I can be of any further assistance to you then please do not hesitate to contact me again.

With best wishes,

Tom
